Diastolic Heart Failure

What Is Diastolic Heart Failure?

Diastolic heart failure occurs when the bottom part of your heart becomes stiff. This “stiffness” makes it harder for the heart to receive blood back from the body. As a result, blood backs up, causing your lungs to fill with fluid. The fluid in your lungs (pulmonary edema) causes you to feel short of breath and only can be resolved by medical treatment. High salt diets and uncontrolled blood pressure can make diastolic heart failure worse.
